

Facebook Concepts

1. Posting to your own Timeline: A post or status update is something you share that is generally original to you. If you're going out to eat, or just saw a cool movie, or have taken photos you want to post, this is what happens:

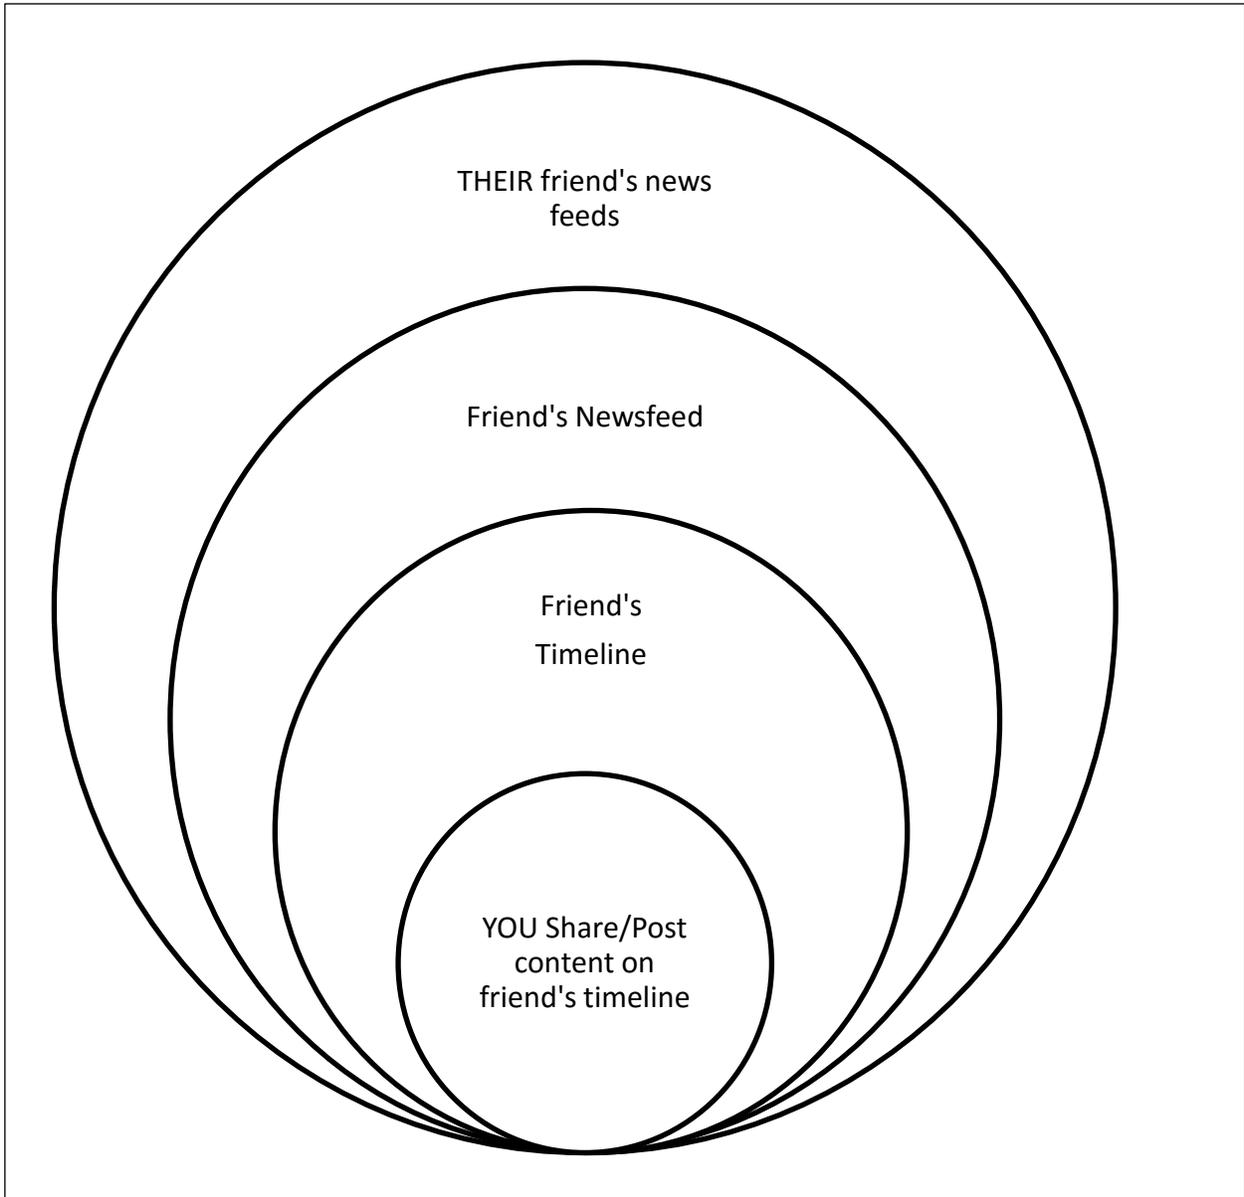

This is how the News Feed is populated with information. The more you post, the more stuff goes to your friends' News Feeds.

2. Sharing content from your News Feed: As you're scrolling through your News Feed (filled with posts and shared content from friends) you may see something you like and wish to share to your own timeline. Sharing is a way of keeping ideas "for later" but remember, what you share is also placed on your friends' news feeds

Your friends may also share what is in his/her news feed.

3. Sharing or Posting Content to a Friend's Timeline: If something in particular strikes you, you may share or post it to one of your Facebook friend's timelines:

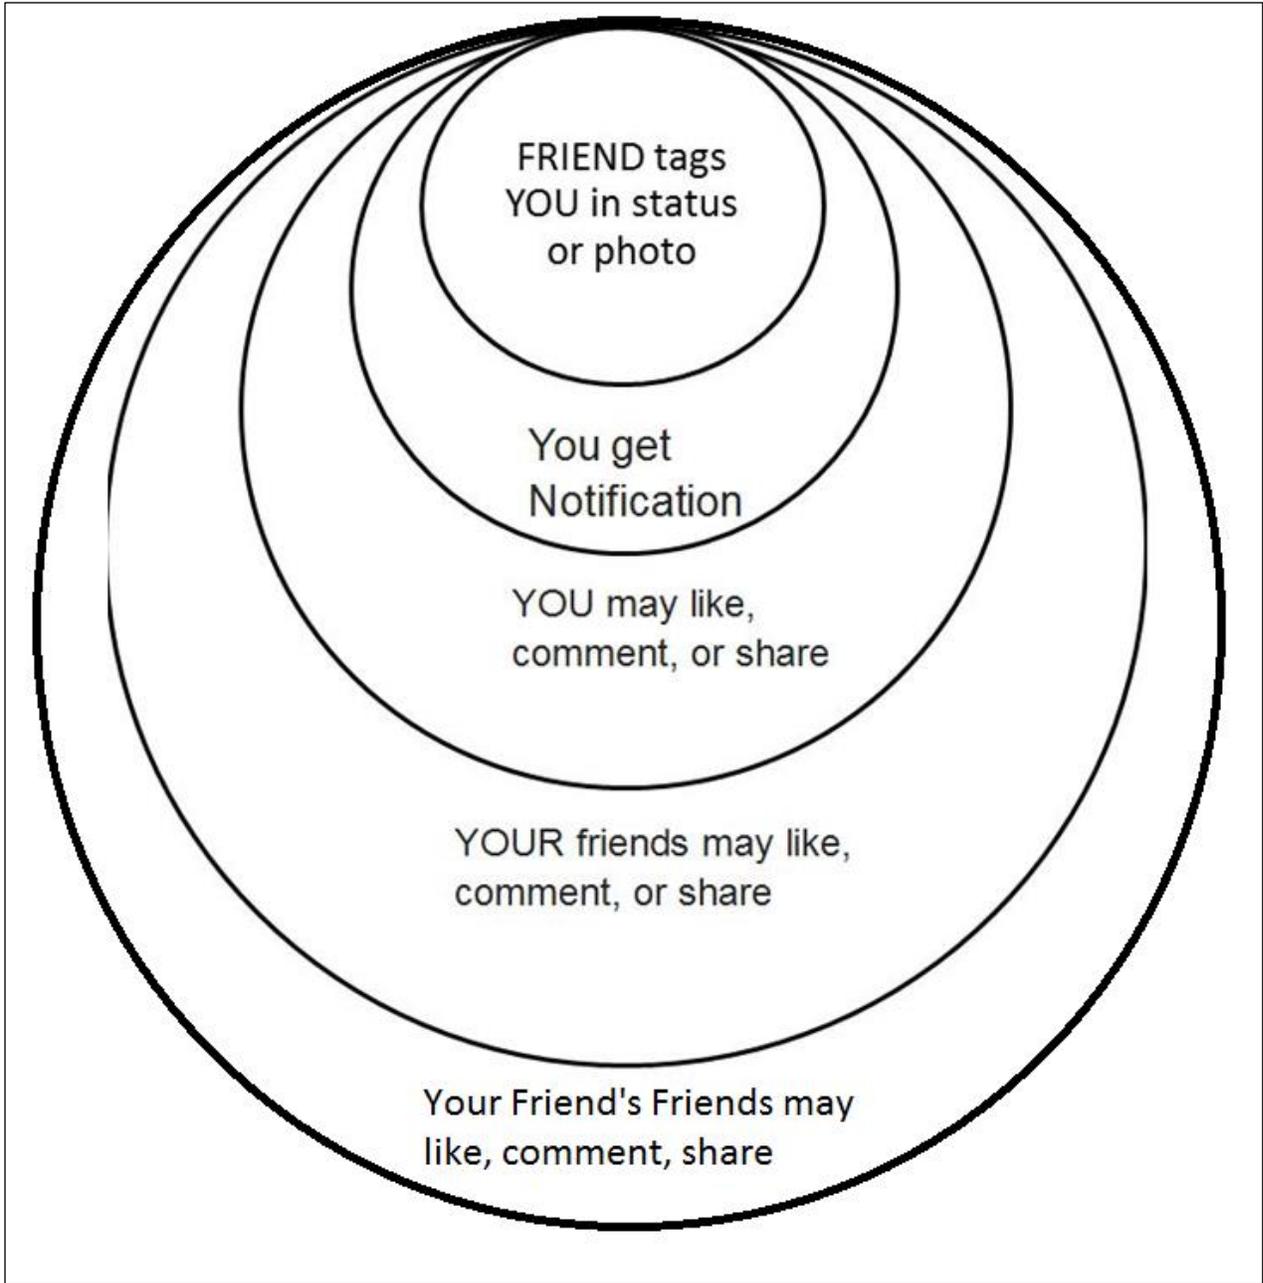

In this way, your friend's friends may see, like, and comment on content you have posted.

4. Tagging your Facebook friends in a status (text) or photo (picture): A tag is a link that you create to send a friend a notification they are either mentioned in a status or there is a photo of them (or something related to them) that YOU have uploaded to Facebook. Tagging is done through a prompt on Facebook (depending on text or photo, the tag prompt looks slightly different)

This is the “social networking” part of Facebook

Conversely, one of your Facebook friends may tag you in a photo or status. This is the opposite of what happened before:
